Thoughts on his letter to America? Excerpts

>The first thing that we are calling you to is Islam.

>We call you to be a people of manners, principles, honour, and purity; to reject the immoral acts of fornication, homosexuality, intoxicants, gambling, and trading with interest.

>You are the nation that permits Usury, which has been forbidden by all the religions. Yet you build your economy and investments on Usury. As a result of this, in all its different forms and guises, the Jews have taken control of your economy, through which they have then taken control of your media, and now control all aspects of your life making you their servants and achieving their aims at your expense

>You are a nation that permits acts of immorality, and you consider them to be pillars of personal freedom.

>You are a nation that permits gambling in its all forms. The companies practice this as well, resulting in the investments becoming active and the criminals becoming rich.

>You are a nation that exploits women like consumer products or advertising tools calling upon customers to purchase them. You use women to serve passengers, visitors, and strangers to increase your profit margins. You then rant that you support the liberation of women.

>You have destroyed nature with your industrial waste and gases more than any other nation in history. Despite this, you refuse to sign the Kyoto agreement so that you can secure the profit of your greedy companies and industries.

A rebuttal to Dr Kaffir

>it's very repetitive
It's primarily an oral work (Bible means "book" but Qur'an means "telling") and transmitted orally, it is memorized in its entirety and those who have memorized it as considered more authentic transmitters of it than those who simply write it. The tones and stresses used with recitation of it are incorporated in an art called tajweed, which can be done correctly or incorrectly. Therefore it should be judged according to the standards of an oral work, not a novel, and a primarily oral work will have repetition for the same reason an symphony does (no, I don't listen to music, I am just using it as an analogy) and in the same way, repetition of some key phrases but broader concepts are repeated with variation like themes in a musical composition. There can of course be a repetitive song, but if we say this we don't mean it in the same way as having a recurring theme, we mean the same few notes repeated ad nauseam. The Qur'an is not repetitive in that sense.

Yes this is very common in certain areas and it is halal (anything closer is haram). This was extremely common in the west until recently, reason being is that when parents selected spouses for their children, they took into account the family of the prospective spouse. This is traditional but not really a good criticism and it's pretty laughable that countries where same-sex marriage is common are calling cousin marriage degenerate.

>it was recited orally one verse at a time
Actually, not, generally several verses were recited at a time, and they were repeated multiple, multiple times and taught by repetition within the Prophet's ﷺ lifetime. The only historical sources we have on how the writing work say it was indeed written down in the Prophet's lifetime as he went, but it was not collated until Abu Bakr (may Allah be pleased with him) became the first Khalifa , and he did this because Islam was expanding so fast he was worried the purely oral transmission couldn't be adequately supervised. This collated copy was considered definition but it was not widely copied until Uthman (may Allah be pleased with him) became the third Khalifa. The source here is Sahih al-Bukhari 7191. You might now say, "Well this is a MUSLIM account, how accurate is that?" What other account would you have me use? Furthermore if this account isn't credible, why would some baseless contemporary account randomly made up and posted on 4chan by this semi-Boomer be credible?

>Sharia limits wives to four, but he had more Correct, that is because the limit is in the Surah an-Nur, which was only revealed three years before the Prophet ﷺ died, that is, after he had married all his wives. After the limit of four wives was revealed, it was revealed that Muhammad ﷺ could keep the wives he had, but that he was to take no more, and that his limit was not above others because even if he divorced some of his wives he could not take more (Qur'an 33:52).

It's mostly pslam-like prayers and legal injunctions. The narratives, mostly overlapping with the Bible but sometimes with other prophets, are not by any means bad, although they are narrated by Allah ﷻ, and so give a different perspective. If you read a good English interpretation like Pickthall or Arberry, you will find the narrations have much literary quality.

The Qur'an never suggests Mary (may Allah be pleased with her) is worshiped as part of the Trinity. It does accuse Catholics of worshiping Mary (may Allah be pleased with her) and Jesus (alayhe salam) alongside Allah ﷻ in 5:116, but this is not the verse which criticizes the Trinity; the verse criticizing the Trinity is the one which attack those who say Allah ﷻ is three (5:171).

There is no such site, he means islamqa.info. This is an extremely popular fatwa site, I personally really like it, but it should be known it is very much and explicitly a Salafi fatwa site. There are other major, non-Salafi fatwa sites to use, like islamweb.net, seekersguidance.org and islamqa.ORG

>I've have read such and such
He is lying, for example he refers to the four maddhabs, or schools of fiqh (jurisprudence) as Sharia "codes". These schools are not codes, they are different methodologies for arriving at rulings. There are maybe two codes in Sharia (and this is arbitrary and artificial, not part of Sharia itself), fiqh al-'ebadat (what deals with ritual, purification, prayer, worship, and so forth) and fiqh al-mu'amalat wa al-adaab ashshar'eyah (this deals with law, social obligation, everyday morals, etc). Of the penal code, there are three elements: Hudud (this deals with adultery, theft, blasphmey, and so forth), Qisas (retribution, an eye-for-an-eye, this deals with murder, abortion, manslaughter, battery, and so on), and Tazir (things that aren't covered under either of the prior two but should clearly be illegal, such as pornography). Besides the penal code there are lots of elements to Sharia like tax rules and financial regulation (selling unripe fruit for example is illegal). There is however no division of four codes, and even the four schools are only the major ones (Zahiri is a very minor but sometimes influential fifth school, and other schools have come and gone).

>Islam was a political system invented for accruing power False. Revelation of the Qur'an started many years before the Prophet held or expected to hold a position of power. He and the Ummah were persecuted for many years in Mecca, facing boycotts and other hardship for just practicing their faith. His first wife, Khadija, may Allah be pleased with her, died from this, which he said was the worst year of his whole life. One night his enemies were fed up with waiting and paid assassins to kill him in his sleep. He escaped and fled to Medina, which is where he became established as leader, having a widespread reputation for fairness in arbitration. He established a constitution for the city which brought all the tribes and religions into a mutual defense pact that they would band together against an outside attack; quarrels between families or tribes or Jews and Christians would be arbitrated by him. This is when the first Qur'anic legal precepts began to be revealed, although they only applied to Muslims; other religions he governed according to their own laws.

>he can have all the wives he wants No, it doesn't say that, I already addressed this.

>he can have all the female slaves he wants
Any Muslim can, provided she is enslaved in a halal way (through jihad). You are free to have sex with her, however her chastity is protected (24:33). She and slaves in general must be clothed and fed as well as their masters are (Sahih Muslim 4092). If she converts, she cannot be a concubine and you must marry her. If she bears a child, she cannot be sold, and must be either freed or supported as a lifetime concubine and becomes free upon your death; all her children with her master are legally free and legitimate.

That's not true at all, verses 8:67-68 are the voice of Allah ﷻ sharply rebuking Muhammad's ﷺ actions. The Prophet ﷺ is completely correct on doctrine and the paragon of men, the superlative man, but he was still a man, he made mistakes. By calling him "perfect" we don't mean infallible or inerrant, just that none of his teachings were false and his is the nonpareil of humanity.

I am rebutting it, read the text

>forbid paintings, poetry, music
He forbid iconography (including depictions of prophets), not painting in general. Although what qualifies as iconography is disputed, it's universally held to include any depiction of prophets; stricter interpretations hold it be any depiction of humans or animals (anything visibly animate), others simply lifelike, realistic depiction (which normally actually excludes photography as that's generally ruled as a reflection, although not all say photography is halal, Islamqa for example does not), but photography too can be considered iconography in some contexts, especially in veneration of leaders, in which case it is haram). Poetry was certainly never forbidden, many chapters of the Qur'an, including those used in prayer, are literally rhyming poetry. Music for dancing or using musical instruments is forbidden, singing (if done by men) is not if the lyrics aren't sinful, also some schools permit percussion instruments accompanying singing; dancing is permitted if it's just with your spouse, or not in the presence of the opposite sex, men and women often celebrate a wedding by dancing, just in a sex-segregated way. Now while we're on this subject, there is a western misconception that Islamic calligraphy was used to get around injunctions against art. This is simply false, the very strictest opinion (and this is what I follow) is that animate beings cannot be depicted in detail, but if their face or hands are not detailed, and the picture doesn't adore a place of honor, it is permitted. Abstract depictions are universally halal and always have been, this was true from the beginning.

>the Qur'an says don't marry his wives

This applied to all prophets and was a general injunction. Marrying a prophet's wife could lead to major political and religious problems as it could suggest one is taking over his position.

>the Qur'an gave him permission to marry his adopted son's (former slave) ex wife
"Hot as hell" is a really silly way of putting it, she was 40 at the time. Yes it was part of the declaration that the Prophet ﷺ has no sons (33:40); indeed none of his male children would survive. This has major political implications because it means his prophethood is not a dynasty and his position cannot be inherited. The story that he saw her in a state of undress and fell in love and then that's why her husband divorced her has no isnad--that is, there is no chain or source for this, it appeared hundreds of years after his death. Here is what does have isnad: the Prophet ﷺ knew her from childhood and told her to marry his adopted son, which she really did not want to do because he was a freed slave and she was from a noble line, she looked down on him but still did it because Muhammad ﷺ told her to marry for piety and not birth . Their marriage was not happy, she had a bad temper and was very proud. He divorced her--which put her in a very bad position--and the Prophet ﷺ married her. As his wife she continued to be hot tempered and competed with A'isha (may Allah be pleased with her) for leadership of the wives, but came to her to defence when the latter was slandered. This is the account based on isnad.

This is for fornication and adultery, rape is not subject to this standard (Sunan Abi Dawud 4379, or 4366 for some English orderings). This is when there is absolutely no evidence besides people saying so. A paternity test or catching them together in your house or his house would be quite enough to convict them, as would other hard forms of tangible evidence. A husband may also swear four times by God his wife committed adultery and on the fifth he will be damned if he is wrong (she may counter it in her defense and is subject to the same divine retribution). But if all else fails, he can easily divorce her if there is any evidence of misconduct on her part, such as texting another man. In such a case he is not required to pay her anything and he recovers the collateral money set aside for her in case of divorce.

>the Qur'an says for people not to visit him too much

Yes. He was extremely courteous, shy and never raised his voice. His etiquette was impeccable and has a leader, both political and religious, people constantly came to his house to talk to him, and being civil and polite he would let them in despite the extreme volume of visitors.

This was more of a product of his extremely good reputation that preceded him to Medina and his exemplary and honest exercise of power there. Raiding caravans didn't do it, that was a common practice between feuding tribes on the daily, neither did he indiscriminately raid caravans, just Meccan ones.

>killed/enslaved all the Jews there

There was trouble with all three of the tribes, yes, two ended up exiled and one killed/enslaved: in one incident a member of the Banu Qaynuqa secretely placed a pin in a Muslim woman's clothes from behind while she was sitting in his jewelry story; when she stood up, it caused her leg to be exposed, much to her shame and his cackling amusement. A Muslim man did what any good Muslim man would do, he beat the Jew to death. In retaliation, the Jews beat the Muslim man to death. Muhammad ﷺ then declared war on this tribe. Ultimately they were defeated, but they weren't killed or enslaved, just kicked out. As for the Banu Qurayza, had all their adult males put to death for treachery, siding with an enemy invasion in direct violation of the pact, the Constitution of Medina. Many Jews today talk about the Prophet ﷺ as having committed some sort of genocide on the Jews, but Muhammad ﷺ actually protected Jews when they upheld their agreements, he only came down very hard on usury and unfair business dealings like hoarding, gouging and false advertising, but to this day many Jews refer to this as if it were genocide, in fact he just regulated the economy.

>he returned to Mecca and conquered it and forced everyone to convert

Everyone except Chrstians or Jews, yes. He actually issued a decree, signed with an imprint of his hand (he couldn't write), that any Muslim who mistreated Christians is to be regarded as an apostate. This decree is known as the Ashtiname. He gave it to the monks of St. Catherine's monastery, on Mount Sinai, for safekeeping, and it is still there for all to see.

Can you elaborate on that? I'm interested in theology, but not overly familiar with theological terms; from what I've been told, the idea of abrogation is that (since the Quran isn't ordered chronologically) in the cases where verses contradict each other, those that were revealed to the Prophet Mohammad later override the previous ones; thus many of the peace and love verses (from when he was in Mecca) are superceded by the fire and sword verses (from when he was in Medina), which jihadist groups use to justify world conquest in the name of Allah.

The advent of an organized Muslim army was revealed but also followed quite logically and naturally once Muslims became a polity as opposed to simply a minority that had no weapons or food. Anon made that number up or got it from someone who made it up; there is no abrogation here, just different contexts. If you want to see the general rules explicated next to each other, read Surah 60, it's pretty short. Islam is not insane and bloodthirsty, but neither is it pacifist or desirous of peace at all costs. It is imperialist, but honors peace treaties and friendly states. Those who disrespect us or make trouble should be dealt with by force, not by praying for them, but those who are righteous should be respected.

This is literally synonymous with taxes and every government demanded them then and now. Women, children, the elderly, monks and clergy are all exempt however, so all-in-all pretty fair. "But Muslims don't have to pay it!" Correct, a Muslim empire obviously accords a preferred status to Muslims. Muslims do however have to pay Zakat, which Dhimmis don't.

>IslamQA

>it's given out at mosques

It's definitely considered a classic of Shafi'i fiqh. It's also definitely not handed out to new converts who are typically told not to worry about particular schools of fiqh until they have basic practice down. They are given little booklets on ablution and prayer, maybe ones on the Qur'an or Hadiths.

The way hijab is used today tends to refer what is indicated in Abu Dawood 4104. The screen is used for gatherings all the time though, yes, and in education if women and men need to mix in a class for some reason. Covering the face with the niqab is mostly considered a rewarded deed, not obligatory for anyone but the wives of the Prophet ﷺ, but still praiseworthy and recommended in every school

>clitoris vs prepuce
I can't find any record of this court case. However the word, which means both the hood and clitoris proper as one organ, is legally understood to mean prepuce (hood) in this context rather than the clitoris proper, based on Abu Dawood 41:5251. This isn't deceptive, it's just translating the proper meaning using English vocabulary which makes a complete distinction between the hood and clitoris.

Sunnis don't use taqiyya. Lying is allowed under certain circumstances, for example if someone puts a gun to your head and says reject Islam you can say you reject it (your life has to be clearly threatened, it can't just be from pressure), but lying about the nature of Islam is not permissible under any circumstances. The Shia conception of taqiyya is also about avoiding persecution but it is much more liberal in scope and allows for things likes lying about Islam and can be done even if your life is not directly threatened.

>taqiyya is accepted in every sect
Then he shouldn't have an issue citing daleel instead of an out of context statement from secondary work by a Druze that doesn't cite anything. One can simply refer to the Hadiths on lying, the overwhelming majority condemn it in extremely harsh terms. There are only a few circumstances where it is overtly sanctioned: once, to accomplish an assassination during wartime; two, to compliment your wife. Three, a man is told to insult the Prophet ﷺ or be put to death, which the man does; he later tells Muhammad ﷺ, and Muhammad ﷺ says he should do it again if a similar situation arises. There is no Sunni justification for lying about Islam in any of the above circumstances, they all exclude that.

This actually is not generally a translation of mushreek (shirk means "partnership", a mushreek is someone who ascribes partners to Allahﷻ), but kaffir. Which he would know if he knew what he were talking about. Kaffir means anyone who is not a Muslim, which includes mushrikeen, but also people of the book and atheists and so on. It's more often translated as "unbeliever" or "disbeliever", it comes from the root meaning "to cover up", in this case the truth, someone who rejects truth. Mushreek is commonly translated as "idolater" but also sometimes "polytheist", it does not include atheists or monotheistic kuffar. And yes, atheists are considered worse than mushrikeen.

Al-Nawawi (who is being quoted at this point in the Reliance of the Traveller) wrote in the 13th Century, "sciences" then meant what "philosophy" does now, "sciences of the materialists" meant specific philosophical schools that taught the universe was an eternal perpetual motion made of simple atoms. To project our use of materialist sciences onto Medieval terminology is so anachronistic I shouldn't have to actually bother but the guy doesn't care to note that al-Nawawi is saying this. Philosophy here is of course a translation of "falsafa" which by this time also referred to a specific school which taught doctrines like the eternity of creation, it doesn't mean "philosophy" in the broader sense, which is actually strongly endorsed (as are the physical sciences) in the work "The Revival of the Religious Sciences", by al-Ghazali (a crucial Shafi'i thinker).

There are several things considered martyrdom in Islam if a man dies in defense of, they are primarily his religion, his family and his honor. If someone insults your honor, you are entitled to seek redress. Preferably this is handled by the legal system to prevent feuds, but if there is no legal system that adresses this and the person isn't a Muslim, you are entitled to handle it yourself. Anyway, yes, of course, mocking the Prophet ﷺ is not something we take lightly, as has been proven by people who tried to test us on that. This is however quite distinct from bans on musical instruments or iconography. And once again poetry is not haram unless it is lewd or blasphemous or something of that sort.

He is strawmanning ocassionalism here. Ocassionalists hold that while efficient causation doesn't exist, Allahﷻ makes things run in a pattern like it; in fact that each moment leads to a state very closely connected and following from the prior is seen as evidence of divine sustaining of the universe, since causation is not rational and there must be some external factor establishing the consistency. So a dependable law like causation is taken for granted as how things are made to work, it's just ocassionalists (and not all Muslims are ocassionalists, mainly Ashari are) deny things do this of their own accord. So the very fact that things have an extremely strong pattern of events that spontaneity could simply not dictate, is not seen as blasphemy, but rather proof of an organizing principle. The belief that there is no pattern worth using in research has nothing to do with ocassionalism.

In many species of animals,like hippos, the males fight for the right to mate with the females. Concubinage is no different. When a people are conquered and the women taken as prizes, it is natural for the dominant men to mate with them. This sounds terrible only to those who are indoctrinated with the idea of sex as an expression of subjectivity rather than a role or duty. Sex is of course pleasant and an extreme sin in the wrong context (adultery, fornication, etc) but will a woman attached to just one man who provides for her and protects her, it is very natural. Concubines must be clothed and fed as well as their masters, they can't be shared, they cannot be beaten in a way you wouldn't beat your wife, their children are free and they are entitled to support and freedom when their master dies. They are a part of the household, family. This is very natural. Actually far less distressing to women then flitting from mate to mate with no stability or attachment

Understanding the Shia

The Shia are a weird cult that believes Ali, radhi Allahu anhu, is omniscient and omnipotent. They build shrines to him. Twelvers believe this of all their Twelve Imams. This was a perseveration that arose out of believing he got short shrift in the dispute with Abu Bakr, radhi Allahu anhu, after Muhammad's, salla Allahu alayhe wassallam, death. Which is debatable but they follow a belief that the Caliphate is hereditary starting with Aki, radhi Allahu anhu, as they see him as basically Muhammad's, salla Allahu alayhe wassallam, son, which the Qur'an flatly denies (33:40). Because of this they made up ridiculous stories I their Hadiths and put them in Wikipedia (just like pinkos do) as objective fact accepted by Sunnis as well, like the idea that 200,000 saw everyone swear allegiance to Ali, radhi Allahu anhu, which is obviously ridiculous. Then all these lies and slander about Umar, radhi Allahu anhu. And A'isha, radhi Allahu anha. In reality Abu Bakr appointed Ali his personal advisor, and Ali married his daughter to Umar. Shia agree here, Sunnis do not agree with their nonsense about Umar brutalizing Fatima, radhi Allahu anha.

Because Shia think A'isha was a witch, they reject her account of Muhammad's, salla Allahu alayhe wassallam, teachings. For example saying men can't dress as women. Consequently trannies are halal for Shia

It goes against nature, which is directly of God, where women slowly warm up to men of quality, not the ones who have wormed their way into power through murder, deceit, etc. (those who run the world today). The artificiality of Islam is apparent in how quickly it split into warring factions, and by now it's as fractured as Protestant Christianity.

You forgot about the part where he said that we will bankrupt the United States with endless military occupations.

How long have we been in Afghanistan?

How much does it cost a year?

Here's a good site on Islamic philosophy, I'm getting into it after I study Greek philosophy, since much of the former either comes straight from the latter or makes a point to deviate from it:

http://muslimphilosophy.org/generalinfo

I'm also getting into Suhrawardi and the Illuminationists (ishraq), I find it interesting even as a non-Muslim

He's right about it all. But of course nothing will ever get solved with an Abrahamic cult

The only spiritual Paradigm that matters: Blood and Soil.
Acting like you can pick and choose spirituality is about as far away from authentic divinity as you can get. You are inexorably bound, by your soul and body, to the Folkgeist of your people. This is the root of Aryan paganism, of Tradition, of Imperium.

Thanks for sharing, and perhaps the way of nature involves family/tribe too instead of young girls being a meat market for older guys until they finally smarten up, the case in the subverted West today. But that doesn't address the issue of forced sex for whoever manages to come into power.

The state is not the spirituality. Rather the state's form is a material projection of the Folkgeist, the spiritual core of the people who compose it. In the same way that a Arab would express his reality through his art and his design mimics the state of his being, so too does spirituality flow along these lines. Spirituality, like art, is a cultural practice which contains Truths more complicated than the singular individual can understand and thus civilization as whole becomes a product of great ideas interacting on one another through an intricate web. The root of this system is found in the biological substance of man which is necessarily determined by his spirit. His actions contained within the history of people, serve to move the this emergent system out of chaos into the greatest of the Folkgeist made reality. This of course is determined by the stock of people themselves. The Aryan Folkgeist is far different from the Arab or semitic Folkgeist. Thus it is clear that the notion of a "universalist cult" like Islam or Christianity is simply a foolish plot set on destroying the authentic spirit of a people.
